Marejadas

In Chile, 'marejadas' (big swells) are common, especially in winter. They happen when storms far away in the Pacific Ocean create big waves that travel to our coast. During a marejada, the sea is very rough and waves can be more than five metres high. The Navy closes the ports and small boats can't go out. People must stay away from the beaches and rocks. Marejadas can damage roads and buildings near the sea.

A. Write T (true) or F (false).

1. Marejadas are common in winter. ____
2. They come from storms near the beach. ____
3. The Navy closes the ports. ____
4. People can swim during a marejada. ____

B. Answer the questions in English.
